Q: Selecting a database in my app's Settings.bundle? In an app's Settings.bundle I have a settings (dict) key "AppType" that is defined like this: AppType Default AppName Hello World AppURL Default I would like to change the value of "AppName" depending on what database is selected in my app's settings. In other words, I'm trying to use the selected database's name to choose which database to use in my application and have it save the change to the user defaults. I tried using a NSDictionary's objectForKey but I can't seem to get the "databaseName" out of the bsddb's dbfopen. Any ideas? A: You are trying to access an unsynced database and the API you are using is not designed to work with unsynced databases. I'm not sure if there is a special API for accessing unsynced databases or if you'll have to use a workaround. This answer on the dbfopen issue notes that this happens when the database is on a disk that is not connected or that is temporarily disconnected, which could be the case when the database is not loaded from disk on startup, such as when you use psql as the database backend. It also talks about switching to a different database backend to sync up the database, so perhaps that is an alternative. EDIT I assume you are using the bsddb wrapper classes that come with cocoa development. You could setup a search to look for any databases with a particular name, then load them and export data from your currently selected database. 在庫限り！送料無料！新品未使用品！激安価格！即決！早い者勝ち！お買い得！
