Hypospadias is the most common congenital malformation of the penis, which is the abnormal opening of the urethra. It is a multifactorial disease, and different etiologies of hypospadias have been proposed to date. In this paper, a literature review was performed for hypospadias in Korean, with the aim of elucidating current knowledge of Korean hypospadias and its associated risk factors. In particular, national and international data, regarding age at surgery, classification of hypospadias, and etiologies of hypospadias were reviewed. Recent studies on hypospadias have included the following risk factors for hypospadias: birth weight, gestational age, maternal age, environmental factors, genetic factors, maternal stress, exposure to exogenous estrogen, family history of hypospadias, and so on. Neonatal risks include delayed abdominal circumference measurement, low birth weight, placenta previa, gestational diabetes, premature rupture of membranes, Caesarian delivery
